Originally the process of creating snapshots was a manual and time-consuming process of mixing the snapshot settings with the original document. Introducing PS CC 2015: Working with the Adobe Photoshop Camera Raw (ACR) developer preview, the snapshot process is streamlined. So now it's easier to get more eyes on your work and receive logic-based feedback. Each ACR image viewed in Photoshop comes with a set of default snapshot settings, which now can be modified on the fly, either by editing the ACR settings or by viewing the snapshot in Photoshop. The snapshot preferences are applied to every image in that project. So you can tweak a snapshot and reset the default settings by creating three new snapshots or you can leave a snapshot as the default and make changes to the three others. This method is shown in the figure above, which compares the snapshot settings and the original ACR settings. Adobe has rolled out one of the new features of Photoshop CC 2015.
